we use data on statewide end of course tests in north carolina to examine the relationship between teacher credentials and student achievement at the high school level the availability of test scores in multiple subjects for each student permits us to estimate a model with student fixed effects which helps minimize any bias associated with the non random distribution of teachers and students among classrooms within schools we find compelling evidence that teacher credentials affect student achievement in systematic ways and that the magnitudes are large enough to be policy relevant as a result the uneven distribution of teacher credentials by race and socio economic status of high school students a pattern we also document contributes to achievement gaps in high school education is an issue that touches everyone personally professionally and as citizens of our respective nations and the world the federal reserve bank of boston has had a long involvement with education reform in massachusetts and in boston specifically we do this out of a sense of community involvement but also out of a real desire to improve the pool from which we draw a major share of our workforce as we consider the challenges facing our country and the world education more so than almost anything else is at once both at the heart of every problem and a part of every solution p xi
