from the distinguished polymath George Steiner comes a profound and illuminating vision of the inseparability of western philosophy and its living language. With his hallmark forceful discernment, George Steiner presents in the poetry of thought his magnum opus: an examination of more than two millennia of western culture, staking out his claim for the essential oneness of great thought and great style. Sweeping yet precise, moving from essential detail to bracing illustration, Steiner spans the entire history of philosophy in the west as it entwines with literature, finding that as Sartre stated in Being and Nothingness, in all philosophy there is a hidden literary prose. The poetic genius of abstract thought, Steiner believes, is lit, is made audible, argument even analytic has its drumbeat, it is made ode. What voices the closing movements of Hegel's phenomenology better than Edith Piaf's Non, Je ne regrette rien? A twofold negation which Hegel would have prized. This essay is an attempt to listen more closely.

According to our commonsense view of the matter, beliefs, desires, intentions, and the like are special kinds of internal states, the possession of which by a given creature potentially explains its behavior and otherwise renders the creature intelligible to us. So-called folk psychology provides us with a rough and ready network of counterfactuals delimiting the role supposedly played by these internal states vis-à-vis perceptual input, inference, and behavioral output. In a normal member of our species, the exact empirical details of this network do not matter here for we are not undertaking further refinement or systematization of the relevant counterfactuals. Instead, our topic is the ontological analysis of the internal states that occupy the nodes of this complex network and the bearing of that analysis on the truth conditions of the sentences we use to ascribe beliefs and related states. The relevant counterfactuals canonically describe particular belief, desire, and intention states as states of believing, desiring, and intending that such a creature will do a or to be f. In such the use of infinitival clauses to describe desires and intentions is not really an exception: for desiring or intending to do a or to be f is just having a self-regarding desire or intention that oneself does a or that oneself is f. By the lights of our commonsense psychology, then, to be in a particular belief desire or intention state is to bear the corresponding attitudinal relation believing desiring or intending to a certain content where do spontaneous thoughts come from it may be surprising that the seemingly straightforward answers from the mind or from the brain are in fact an incredibly recent understanding of the origins of spontaneous thought for nearly all of human history our thoughts especially the most sudden insightful and important were almost universally ascribed to divine or other external sources only in the past few centuries have we truly taken responsibility for their own mental content and finally localized thought to the central nervous system laying the foundations for a protoscience of spontaneous thought but enormous questions still loom what exactly is spontaneous thought why does our brain engage in spontaneous forms of thinking and when is this most likely to occur and perhaps the question most interesting and accessible from a scientific perspective how does the brain generate and evaluate its own spontaneous creations spontaneous thought includes our daytime fantasies and mind wandering the flashes of insight and inspiration familiar to the artist scientist and inventor and the nighttime visions we call dreams this handbook brings together views from neuroscience psychology philosophy phenomenology history education contemplative traditions and clinical practice to begin to address the ubiquitous but poorly understood mental phenomena that we collectively call spontaneous thought in studying such an abstruse and seemingly impractical subject we should remember that our capacity for spontaneity originality and creativity defines us as a species and as individuals spontaneous forms of thought enable us to transcend not only the here and now of perceptual experience but also the bonds of our deliberately controlled and goal directed cognition they allow the space for us to be other than who we are and for our minds to think beyond the limitations of our current viewpoints and beliefs
