2 II Governance Structures Ensuring Ethical Compliance

Maintaining ethical standards requires more than just a code of conduct it necessitates a robust system of governance This governance involves multiple layers

Professional Organizations

Organizations like the American Institute of CPAs AICPA and CPA Canada establish and enforce the Code of Professional Conduct They provide continuing professional education CPE opportunities to keep CPAs updated on ethical developments and best practices These organizations also handle disciplinary actions against CPAs who violate the code

State Boards of Accountancy

In many jurisdictions state or provincial boards of accountancy oversee the licensing and regulation of CPAs They are responsible for investigating complaints of ethical misconduct conducting disciplinary hearings and imposing sanctions

Firm Governance

Accounting firms themselves have internal governance structures that promote ethical conduct This includes establishing internal ethics codes implementing quality control systems and providing ethics training to their employees Larger firms often have dedicated ethics officers or committees to oversee ethical compliance
